Flamme

ADVERTISEMENT

Flamme was like a mother to Frieren. She saved her when she was at the brink after demons attacked her village and became her mentor. The first time she met Frieren, Flamme praised her for standing her ground against and defeating a horde of powerful demons, but at the same time, told her that it would have been smarter to just run away and hide or resort to ambushes. She was also the one who taught Frieren to hide her mana output so that demons underestimate her and get caught off guard, fully aware that it's seen as dirty and cowardly.

Flamme raised a young Frieren until she died of old age. Frieren cared deeply about Flamme, and is melancholic at the fact that she is one of the only beings still alive that remembers Flamme as anything but a legend. The Einsam would take the form of Flamme in order to try to deceive Frieren for the millennia between Flamme's passing and Frieren's journey with the Hero Party.

dead. He also reassured her that it was okay to remember past memories even ADVERTISEMENT if the people within the memories were gone. Frieren balanced Himmel's optimism, as her long life gave her more experience with matters such as demons. Frieren would later adopt many of Himmel's philosophies when it came to helping people or forming relationships with people. Himmel also did many things to ensure that Frieren would not be left alone in the future, from getting statues of the Hero Party built to memorializing them, to taking rewards that could only be paid off far in the future to Frieren.

Once the Hero Party returns to the Royal Capital, they witness the Era Meteors together. Frieren comments that the view from the city isn't the best, and Himmel gently rebukes her for ruining the mood. Frieren then states that she will take them all to a better place to view the Era Meteors fifty years from now. Fifty years later, Frieren returns to find an aged Himmel. She fulfills her promise and shows the party a more beautiful view of the Era Meteors. Himmel passes away shortly after. At Himmel's funeral, Frieren ~~Wt~~ at first shows little mirrored-lotus ring as a gift, which he got down on one knee and proposed ADVERTISEMENT to her with. Frieren didn't know that the mirrored lotus was a sign of eternal love, but she values the ring greatly as a gift from Himmel and is even willing to give up sleep to search for it when she loses it in the Bande Woods. Though it is still uncertain if Frieren returns Himmel's feelings in any capacity due to her stoic personality as an elf, it is worth noting that Himmel is a huge influence on her, as evident on their current journey. When she is asked on multiple occasions about the reason why she did a certain thing, she replies that "Himmel would have done the same." She always remembers how Himmel handled things and often will do the same or speak the same words whenever a similar situation occurs in the present-day journey with her new party. At some point between meeting Himmel and her first encounter with an Einsam with Fern, the Einsam begins to take on Himmel's form, showing that Himmel has become someone dear to her, even moreso than her master, Flamme.

Heiter

Frieren calls Heiter a "Corrupt Priest".

They were comrades in the Hero Party and became close on their subjugation quest to defeat the Demon King.

During Himmel's burial fifty years later, he comforted her together with Eisen by patting her head, though it is something she didn't like.

Twenty years after Himmel's death, he asked Frieren to help him translate a grimoire that might contain the secret to allow him to live forever or be resurrected, as he just wants to have a little more time on earth. However, it's later revealed this was just a ploy to keep her around and have her train Fern until she could protect herself when he was gone, and subsequently, have Frieren take her under her wing when he's dead. That way, it defeats Frieren's earlier concern and reason for refusing to take Fern as her apprentice with her, which was the death rate of mage apprentices on battlefield. Frieren notes that it seems like he is not afraid to die, but he admits that it is just a mask he wears beneath his smiling appearance to in sight. They both share more similar views on time due to their longer lifespans and are both awkward and bad at expressing their feelings. When Frieren asked him why he cooked the Hero Party Hamburg steaks on their birthdays, he revealed to her that it was a warrior tradition to cook these for warriors that had worked hard, showing how highly he thought of the Hero Party. He also gives Frieren a copy of the recipe that she keeps in her briefcase. He also told Frieren that his favorite food was sour grapes; later, when traveling with Stark, Frieren would find a spell to turn sweet grapes sour that she uses for him when they meet up again. Frieren thinks of Eisen fondly. He is her benchmark for a warrior's strength, with their exploits together leading her to believe that warriors should be able to fall from any height without damage and resist poison. When traveling with Stark, she imparts stories about Eisen's fear to Stark, both reassuring Stark that his fear is normal and showing how she thought highly of Eisen's ability to persevere despite his fear.

her as her vanguard on her new journey to get to know humans better, ADVERTISEMENT and is shocked to realize that Eisen too has aged, and is now unable to wield his axe as he once did. He reassures her that life slows down as you age, and she wishes him well as she departs. Years later, after Heiter's death, Frieren seeks Eisen out to ask if he needed any help. It is revealed that in the years since Himmel's death, seeing Frieren's regret at not getting to know him better, Heiter and Eisen have been corresponding and trying to locate the location of Flamme's notes, which hold information on Aureole. Eisen is the one who gives Frieren the new goal for her journey: to travel to Aureole and speak with Himmel again.

Since he is too old now and is past his prime, Eisen suggests that Frieren recruit his adopted son and apprentice, Stark, instead. Frieren asks if Stark is any good, and in response, Eisen tells her all about Stark. Without actually saying Stark is strong, Frieren knows that Stark is more than strong enough. Before they depart from Eisen's home for Aureole, Eisen tells Frieren that though her journey with the Hero Party ~~W~~ was only one-one

Fern

Frieren is Fern's travel companion and mentor. She has known Fern since she was little, first meeting her when travelling to Heiter's cabin. It was there that Heiter asked Frieren to take her on as her apprentice, which she would eventually do once Heiter passed away. They both share a love for magic.

Having travelled together since Fern was young, Frieren can be described as something akin to a parent or guardian to Fern. They have a very strong bond. Frieren tries to know more about Fern, going to such lengths as to apologize to her for her lack of knowledge, as can be seen in her efforts on Fern's 16th birthday. Eventually once Fern got older, their relationship morphed with Fern becoming the more responsible and grounded one of the two, often needing to take care of Frieren or prevent her from getting sidetracked, and it has been implied that Fern is the one managing their finances.

these comments, with the exception of comments about her age. She still remembers all the times Stark has called her an old lady or a hag, and tells him that if he reaches three strikes, she will throw a tantrum.

However, she also revokes strikes for Stark's efforts. Though Frieren is unable to train Stark as she is not a warrior, she will direct him to train under others, such as Voll. She cares deeply for him in her own way, going out of her way to share stories about Eisen with Stark and making Hamburg steaks for him on his birthday, showing that she thinks of him as a warrior that works hard. She will also praise Stark after a hard fought battle, and is accepting of his cowardice, telling him that if he ever feels the need to flee, then they will flee as a party.

Stark and Frieren often must withstand Fern's bad moods together. When Fern is angry at her, Frieren seeks out Stark and asks him to help her make amends with Fern. However, Frieren also displays consideration for Stark's feelings W and tries to smooth impression that Frieren hates her, and believed that the two of them would never see each other again before Frieren arrived to deliver Flamme's will.

Sein

ADVERTISEMENT

With Sein, Frieren refers to herself as an "older lady" and acts as an adult that would frequently praise Sein for his effort. She tells Sein that he is doing a good job of being a proper adult, and will pat his head in praise. According to Sein, Frieren is the only person that treats him like a child, which he seems to quietly appreciate. Frieren sees herself in Sein, as he is someone that had resigned himself to living with regret after putting off a goal for a substantial amount of time, just as she had put off defeating the Demon King. Just as Himmel and the Hero Party reached their hand out to her and taught her the fun of traveling with others and going on a journey, she hoped to give Sein the same opportunity. When Stark and Fern are fighting, Frieren often asks Sein to mediate, both because he is a priest but also because he is better at interpersonal communication than she is.

They often go long periods of time without seeing each other. During the First-Class Mage Examination, Serie was adamant about not passing Frieren, as she still showed none of the ambition or utilitarian views on magic that Serie herself did.

Despite their relationship, the two of them understand each other quite well and know exactly how one another thinks. As both of them are elves who have long lifespans, they share a unique perspective on time and advancement that others do not, as shown in Serie's warning to Frieren that the Era of Humans was upon them. Frieren shows a great amount of respect towards Serie's instincts, claiming they are never wrong. Despite disapproving of her beliefs, Serie is able to read Frieren's feelings fairly easily and acknowledges that she is skilled to the point where she should not have even been allowed to participate in the exam.^[1] Before she leaves, Frieren predicts that Serie is planning to fail Mern, but will not be
